FULL CORONAVIRUS COVERAGE

Newsom announces new restrictions in 19 California counties

Newsom: State will 'mitigate' July 4th gatherings

Socialite threw a backyard soiree. Then tests came back positive.

Two metrics suggest COVID is indeed back on the rise in Bay Area

Why coronavirus cases in California are suddenly surging

4:33 PM SF cases on the rise: 'We don't know if this is a one-time blip'

SFGATE

https://www.sfgate.com/commute/articl 15328138.php

Muni says it won't thave a lot of work t

By Amanda Bartlett, SFGATE Updat

IMAGE 1 OF 54

FILE - A San Francisco Municipal Railway (MUNI) train passes by the UCSF Mission Bay medical center in San Francisco on March 23, 2020. The transit agency announced Tuesday it would no longer transport police

... more

Just hours before SFMTA bus drivers halted service for eight minutes and 46 seconds to symbolically memorialize the life of George Floyd, the transit agency made another monumental decision.

As several demonstrations continued to take place throughout the Bay Area on Tuesday, Muni announced it would no longer transport officers from the San Francisco Police Department to protests.

"The idea for the memorial was suggested by one of our transportation controllers in our Transportation Management Center," said Erica Kato, a spokesperson for Muni. "We've been engaged in conversations with our staff, and that has given us the opportunity to reflect on what we can do to support our staff and black and brown community, and turn words into action."

This news comes after the transit agency was criticized on social media for videos uploaded by users showing officers in riot gear departing packed buses in downtown San Francisco earlier this month. Joe Fitzgerald Rodriguez, a journalist for KQED, also shared a photo on Twitter of a digital display that read "Police Services" on the back of a bus.

"We transport everyone at MTA and make sure our services are available for critical needs," SFMTA responded at the time. "From the COVID+ patients we transported to health care and rooms to SFPD officers, Muni is for everyone. To be clear, no Muni vehicles or employees will be used to transport any detainee."

MORE BAY AREA NEWS

Carjack suspect drives off Santa Cruz cliff, survives

Newsom says new restrictions will be announced before July 4

On Tuesday, however, the transit agency said it was making efforts to advance its racial equity work and support communities of color.

"We want to be clear about the SFMTA's commitments going forward. We have an opportunity as agents of change," wrote SFMTA.

The organization said it will prioritize "agency-wide implicit bias training" in addition to building upon its equity strategy to improve service performance in San Francisco neighborhoods with high percentages of people of color in low-income households.

"Thanks to our staff and riders for sparking 100s of conversations at @sfmta_muni about undoing the deep structural racism at root of all transport depts," tweeted Jeffrey Tumlin, SFMTA's director of transportation. "We have a lot of work to do."

MORE COVERAGE ON THE GEORGE FLOYD PROTESTS:

Sign up for 'The Daily' newsletter for the latest on Bay Area protest coverage here.

• Police reportedly threaten to arrest artists creating 'Black Lives Matter'

€ POWERED BY CONCERT FEE	DBACK

mural in Oakland

- SFPD Chief Scott has 'open mind' about defunding the police
- How a neighborhood battle started over painting 'Black Lives Matter' on SF's Bernal rock
- Muni to pause service for 8 minutes, 46 seconds today
- When will we know if the protests led to a coronavirus surge?

Amanda Bartlett is an SFGATE Culture Reporter. Email: amanda.bartlett@sfgate.com | Twitter: @byabartlett

© 2020 Hearst Communications, Inc.

HEARST