

MTA Recognized Among Top 500 Entry-Level Employers

By LISA HUYNH

(Feb. 11, 2003) Finding a job can be tough these days, especially because we live in a highly competitive world.

CollegeGrad.com, an Internet job search service, recently named MTA as one of the top 500 entry-level employers of college students and graduates in the U.S. MTA is a member of the National Association of Colleges and Employers (NACE).

The Metro Internship Program, which gives college students an opportunity to work in a professional environment, was the primary reason MTA was cited by CollegeGrad.com, according to Marion Colston-Fayyaz, director of Strategic Organization.

MTA expects to hire 25 entry-level college graduates in 2003.

"MTA is pleased to be recognized as one of the top 500 employers," says Colston-Fayyaz. "This recognition has been given to our agency for its continued work as an employer with a very active college internship program."

Colston-Fayyaz believes the program would not be successful if it weren't for the commitment and dedication MTA departments give to their college interns.

She also credited Administrative Intern Tai Alimi, who coordinates the Metro Internship Program, for completing NACE's Job Outlook 2003 survey that helped place MTA among the nation's top 500 employers of entry-level college graduates.

Since 1995, CollegeGrad.com has been helping college students and recent graduates look for jobs. The job search service's web site not only features job postings, but also such helpful links as resumes, cover letters, job search advice and more.

MTA, Disney, Boeing and Hewlett-Packard were among the top 500 employers named by the service.

Back to Bulletin Board