Metro San Fernando Valley Service Sector Names Maria Reynolds New Transportation Manager for West Valley Bus Division in Chatsworth

- Simi Valley Resident Gets Top Job

Maria Reynolds, a Simi Valley resident, has been named the new transportation manager at MTA's West Valley Division 8 in Chatsworth, announced MTA.

"Maria brings a wealth of knowledge and expertise, having been with MTA for a long time," said Metro San Fernando Valley Sector General Manager David Armijo. "She's extremely dedicated and committed to her work."

Reynolds, a graduate of USC and an 18-year transportation veteran, started as a college intern in 1985 with MTA's predecessor agency, the Southern California Rapid Transit District, interning in the agency's Employee Relations Department.

Upon graduating from college with a bachelor degree, Reynolds went on to work in various departments doing everything from being a labor relations analyst to chief analyst to working directly with transportation directors to her recent promotion to transportation manager at MTA's West Valley Division.

As division manager she is responsible for overseeing the operation of the transportation functions within the West Valley division that encompasses the deployment of 187 buses, supervision of 350 bus operators and the operation of 18 Metro Bus lines in the San Fernando Valley.

"I am extremely excited about this new opportunity and will work hard to provide quality on-time bus service to the customers we serve," said Reynolds.

Reynolds, 39, resides in Simi Valley with her husband, Rich, and their two children, Christopher and Kyle.
