MORE METRO BUSES ARE HEADED FOR THE STREETS; ROUTE CHANGES TO IMPROVE SERVICE DURING PEAK HOURS

Beginning Sunday, June 29, Metro Bus passengers will see improved service due to about two dozen route changes and the addition of more than 50 buses into service during weekday peak (i.e. rush) hours.

As part of the terms of a consent decree reached between MTA and the Bus Riders Union and approved in federal court last October, MTA will reduce the average maximum number of standees on its 43-seat Metro buses from 19 to 15. The reduction will be accomplished by adding 49 buses into service during the weekday morning peak hours of 6 a.m. to 9 a.m., and 48 buses into service during the afternoon peak hours of 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.

The service additions will reduce the number of standees during peak hours from 45 percent over seating capacity to 35 percent. Nearly 400,000 daily boarding passengers are expected to benefit from the new load standard.

"We're making excellent progress at fulfilling the letter and the spirit of the consent decree," said MTA Board Chairman Larry Zarian. "These service additions are good for our Metro Bus passengers and good for MTA."

On MTA contracted lines operated by ATE Ryder, MTA will add four buses into service during the weekday morning peak hours (two on Line 125-Rosecrans Avenue, one on Line 232-Pacific Coast Highway, and one on Line 266-Rosemead Avenue/Lakewood Blvd.) and three buses during afternoon peak hours (one each on Lines 125, 232 and 266).

"MTA is making a significant change in service," said MTA Interim CEO Linda Bohlinger. "The service additions are another important step toward improving customer satisfaction by lessening overcrowding on Metro buses."
